UML Smokers Under Fire

Lisa Turcotte
Connector Contributor

On February ninth, Chancellor Hogan held an open meeting for students to voice their comments and opinions. Sy Nguyen, took this opportunity to present a proposal on the banning of cigarette smoking at the South Campus dining hall. Nguyen's proposal stated that according to a recent study done by the EPA, three thousand non-smokers will develop lung cancer from second-hand smoke each year. Nguyen believes that "It is time this University does something to protect the rights of non-smokers," and Chancellor Hogan seems to agree. He in fact supports a No-Smoking Policy campus wide.

dent body. The ban would effect all University buildings including the dormitories, but as Dean King pointed out "What you do behind close doors is not our business, no matter what you may be smoking."

The South Campus dining hall proposal will be dealt with separately from the University ban on smoking, since it was the original issue presented at the open house meeting. It will be discussed among the administration and the already designated smoking areas may be revised. There are only certain areas on campus where smoking is permitted and now that this issue is brought to our attention, the policies could be better enforced or amended.

Harvard student Criticizes AMA group

By Manlio A. Goetzl

College Press Service

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. - A second-year student at Harvard Medical School co-authored a study published in the Jan. 6 New England Journal of Medicine, alleging that the political action committee of the American Medical Association (AMA) places its economic agenda before its public health concerns.

Congressional candidates who opposed the AMA's position on three key public health issues received more money from the AMA's political action committee than other candidates who supported these issues from 1989 to 1992, according to the study co-authored by Joshua M. Sharfstein.

Sharfstein's report in the magazine said the American Medical Political Action Committee (AMPAC) contributed approximately $4,500 more to political candidates who opposed the AMA's positions on promoting tobacco exports, controlling the proliferation of handguns and eliminating federal restrictions on abortion counseling.

"The AMA has taken important stands on certain public health issues and the AMA's political action committee gives more money, on average, to representatives who have voted against the AMA's own public health positions," he said.

Sharfstein, who wrote the study with his father, Dr. Steven S. Sharfstein, said, "It is important for the AMA to articulate to physicians and the public the reasons behind their contributions."

The study theorizes that because AMPAC supported conservative members, as rated by the American Conservative Union, more than liberal members, AMPAC supports members based on their views on particular economic issues.

"AMPAC is advancing the AMA's economic agenda while undermining their public health agenda," Sharfstein said.

"This agenda includes raising doctors' fees under Medicare and opposing a federally run health care system," according to Sharfstein.

AMA Executive Vice President James S. Todd said in a statement that although the "findings are interesting," no definitive conclusions can be drawn because the study was not broad enough.

"The authors chose to narrow their focus by selecting on three issues, instead of analyzing the broad range of areas where the AMA attempts to influence legislation on behalf of the public and the medical profession," Todd said.

Graduate Employees seek Union

Edmund Tsai
Staff Writer

Graduate student Teaching and Research assistants are up in arms over treatment of their community by the UMass Lowell administration. The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) who is the current voice of the group is in the process of forming a union for these graduate students, and feel that the University is impeding the process by not cooperating with them. In the past, there have been clashes between GEO and University officials concerning such issues as the raising of fees for graduate students, and promises of tuition reclassification which did not materialize. Ted Colleta of GEO commenting on their need for a union said, "We [graduate students] feel that we have no representation, no recourse, and no one to go to who will deal with these issues."

On January 18th of this year, the GEO met with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Committee (MLRC) to receive approval to hold a voting session which would decide whether a union could be formed by the Teaching and Research assistants. Last year, GEO had asked the University to allow them to take a vote on this issue and since the University had refused to give permission the matter was taken before the MLRC who certifies many of the unions on campus. According to GEO representatives, the University had in its power the right to grant a union for its graduate students without the need for intervention from the MLRC. But since the initial refusal, the GEO decided to bring the matter before the MLRC.

Present at the Boston meeting with the MLRC were representatives from the GEO, and lawyers for University administration. The GEO presented to the MLRC a signed petition stating that they would like to form a "bargaining unit". MLRC require a petition from a minimum of 30% of the employees, the petition submitted contained signatures from 50% of the graduate employees. The lawyers for the University stated that they did not recognize the GEO as the proper representatives and thereby halted the process. It was indicated to the GEO by MLRC staff that if the University had agreed at the outset, that an quick approval could take place. Now since the University has not agreed to the stipulation, the GEO must gather more information before the Labor Board can deliberate the issue, and make a decision.

Last year, Chancellor Hogan provided in writing to the GEO that he would support the formation of a graduate student union within twenty four hours notice. Apparently this agreement was not held at the time of the meeting last month.

Sue Parsons, who is with the United Auto Workers, an organization assisting the GEO, has said that "there is a question of equality, whether all groups at the University are suffering equally budget wise. What we have seen in the past 3 or 4 years is that the graduate students have taken the brunt of the cuts." She pointed out that the number of Teaching and Research assistants employed 2 years ago was 630, where this year there are 320, and next year there will be even less. Parsons went on to say, "at the undergraduate level, this is going to immediately impact the quality of teaching. The freshmen chemistry labs require 20 TA's. But next year, for the whole chemistry department, which includes research and upper class, there will only be 12 to 14." She feels that the graduate students need to be able to review any University plans to change policies that will affect them, and through representation of a union provide them with the ability to bargain on these changes.

Jeff Nazzaro

This past week, as I've been debating in my crowded mind what to devote this week's column to, I've been a human divided--torn between happiness and horror, love and hate, ease and angst. All week I planned to write on the merits and joys of the "commit random acts kindness and senseless beauty" slogan that has gained local and national prominence as of late. On the flip side, I see many campus issues of which I have opinions being hashed out in classrooms and on the pages of this newspaper. To bitch or not to bitch. I managed to maintain a positive lead of kindness, if you will. But in the end, or now, the issues have stormed back with two late goals and tied me up. It's only fitting, though, given the performance of our beloved ice hockey team this past weekend against Maine.

Speaking of hockey, kudos to goaltender Dwayne Roloson for last Saturday night's 45 save performance against the Black Bears. He is the Hockey East Player of the Year.

Anyway, the two "goals" I refer to figuratively are anti-smoking crusaders and the hand guns for campus police issue. There's a quick solution which would probably please many: give the cops guns and have them shoot smokers on sight. But that wouldn't be very kind, now would it?

The beauty of the "kindness slogan" is that, if acted upon, it transcends the pettiness of our otherwise shallow existence. The idea is to basically just do something nice for someone for no real reason. I think we're a fairly kind and friendly lot here at UML. We hold doors for each other, smile, wave, say hi, lend notes, do favors, all that good stuff--just don't try to snag someone's parking space and everything is usually alright, and quite pleasant. Add this "random kindness" thing into the mix and we're way ahead of the game.

Now, given such a utopian atmosphere, wouldn't it be silly to give our campus police officers handguns? Our campuses are, for the most part, safe. Would expensive training and a nine millimeter automatic handgun really help in the writing of parking tickets? If anything, we should arm our campus police with snow shovels and ice scrapers--now that would help protect the student body. Let's face it, the need for safe and reasonable walking routes supercedes any inferiority complexes or overblown fears over catching cancer while eating lunch.

It seems to me that low enrollment is the most serious issue facing this university. As a result, attention should be focused there. What would police officers with guns lend to that goal.

"And over there is a university policeman with a very big...whoooooops, splat!"

"Uh, excuse me, are you alright? You never showed us where the infirmary is. You want a cigarette?"

Anti-smoking advocates, led by the American Cancer Society, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health and the Environmental Protection Agency, have managed to create an air of hysteria concerning the harmful effects of second-hand cigarette smoke. An army of loyal uh-huh and amen's have joined the crusade, railing about death, destruction and disease. First of all, relax, have a smoke. Really, though, if anyone anywhere can show me conclusive scientific proof that second-hand smoke has killed or caused cancer in anyone--let alone 3,000 a year or 3 per day--I will not only quit smoking that instant, but take up the (electric) torch against cigarette smoking.

As I've stated with the frequency a non-smoker sitting in the smoking section of a restaurant because she or he didn't want to wait artificially coughs just to let you know you're killing them, this university lacks a sense of campus unity. The reasons are many, mostly because we all commute and we all work, so we're never here. One of the largest groups of people hanging out and enjoying (or whatever) being at school, with friends, what have you, are smokers hanging out in the South Campus commuter cafeteria. And now it's being proposed to eliminate such activity from that venue.

It seems as if there is constantly some kind of negative administrative pressure against students here. I don't understand it.

At the hockey games last weekend it was suddenly decided that everyone at the Tully Forum would sit in assigned seats. Yeah, right. Besides the inherent impossibility of such a task, doing so splinters the student cheering section that has been so long in coming together.

Similarly, by eliminating smoking entirely from the South Campus caf., the university will be shattering a integral aspect of vital campus community. Scoff (or cough) if you will, but it's true. There are a lot of smokers at this school. We spend a lot of money in the commuter caf. We're generally considerate of our non-smoking UML brothers and sisters and I think a compromise can be reached, if necessary.

Ask-A-Nurse-Practitioner

Dear N.P.

Why do I have to have proof of immunizations to be in school? My doctor died and I don't have any records from when I was younger. I've been in the military, so I know I've had every necessary shot; and besides nobody gets measles, or German measles anymore anyway. So why the hassle?

Hassled

Dear Hassled,

First of all this is a Massachusetts state law that requires all students born after 1956 and attending an institution of higher education be fully immunized against measles, mumps, rubella (German measles) and tetanus, or they should not be allowed to register and attend classes. This law is not meant to hassle people, but proof of immunization is a public health concern. It is to protect you and the rest of the public.

Secondly, the immunizations you received in the military although they are extensive, are not necessarily the ones you need to be in school.

Unlike smallpox which has been eradicated from the world through extensive immunizations programs world-wide for many years, the other diseases are still around. In fact there have over 20 documented cases of German measles in the Boston area alone in recent months. All of these cases have occurred in young adults. German measles itself is usually a benign, self-limiting illness, but it can have complications and it is most dangerous for pregnant women, because it can cause congenital deafness, blindness, heart defects, and mental retardation in an exposed fetus.

Just a few years ago there were scattered outbreaks of measles (Rubella) on several college campuses in the New England area and because so many college students visit other campuses, particularly athletic teams, it created chaos trying to check all students' records and immunize anyone that wasn't fully immunized.

So again as health care providers it is not our job to hassle you, but to protect you and keep you healthy, and as part of that responsibility we need to be sure everyone on campus is fully immunized. So if you have a "Hold" flag for immunizations try to understand we are only upholding the law, as we are mandated to do.

Dear N.P.

What are the warning signs of frostbite and hypothermia? Sometime waiting for the shuttle on those frigid mornings I've been sure I've had one or the other. If I should have frostbite or hypothermia what do I do for it?

Frosty

Dear "Frosty"

The warning signs for frostbite are numbness and tingling. Then the skin will turn white. In hypothermia the person becomes pale, cold, and stiff. Respirations, heart rate and blood pressure fall. The person becomes extremely lethargic or unconscious and the body temperature is 95 degrees F or below.

Your extremities, face and ears are at greatest risk for frostbite, but generally you need to be exposed to temperatures of 20 degrees or less for several hours. Of course the lower the temperature and the greater the windchill factor the faster frostbite will occur. Other factors that can put you at a greater risk for frostbite are being tired, drinking alcohol, smoking cigarettes, getting wet, and having diabetes or circulation problems. Hypothermia is much less likely to happen and generally only occurs in hikers exposed in high altitudes, drowning victims, or the elderly.

You can protect against frostbite and hypothermia by wearing layers of clothing including socks, a hat and mittens. Mittens are better than gloves as they allow your fingers to rub against each other, and putting your hands under your armpits can also help.

The treatment for both conditions is to warm up and thaw out as soon as possible. A victim of true hypothermia needs immediate hospitalization. For frostbite you can put hands or feet in tepid water of 100 degrees for about 10 minutes. Vigorous rubbing is not a good idea, because it can damage blood vessels. If the skin is blistered or does not return to normal color or remains numb seek medical attention.

UCLA Survey: Freshman Aspirations Hit New High

by John Williams
Special Correspondent
College Press Service

More college freshmen have hopes of obtaining advanced degrees after they get their four-year degree than ever before, and women are more likely than men to aspire to the highest possible degrees such as doctorates, according to findings in a sweeping survey of this year's freshmen class.

The 28th annual survey of entering college freshmen, conducted by the Higher Education Research Institute at the University of California-Los Angeles, also found that competitive pressures and stress among freshmen are at all-time highs. The survey was completed last fall by 220,757 first-year students at 427 colleges and universities, and was sponsored by the American Council on Education, a Washington, D.C.-based higher education association.

Sixty-five percent of the freshmen surveyed in 1993 plan to pursue a graduate degree after they finish college, the survey found. In comparison, 55 percent of the freshmen polled in 1992 and less than 50 percent of those polled in the early 1970s had indicated they wanted to pursue education beyond the four-year degree.

"Financial security after graduation appears to be the motivation in obtaining advanced degrees..."

More importantly researchers found, was the fact that for the first time ever in the survey women were more likely than men to seek all major types of advanced degrees (master's doctoral, medical and law) than men; 27.3 percent of the female first-year students indicated they wanted to pursue terminal degrees, compared with 25.8 percent of the men. In 1967, three times more men than women had planned to pursue a doctoral, medical or law degree (26.7 percent vs. 8.5 percent).

"To close such a wide gap in a relatively short span of two decades is truly remarkable," said UCLA Professor Alexander W. Astin, director of the survey.

The comprehensive survey does not draw conclusions from the volumes of data garnered from public and private two-and four-year institutions, but rather shows statistical trends among first-year students.

Financial security after graduation appears to be the motivation in obtaining advanced degrees, the survey found. Seventy-five percent of the respondents said that a "very important" reason for attending college is "to be able to make more money." More than four out of five (82.1 percent, compared with 78.5 percent last year) said that going to college is important so they can get a "better job."

Money is also an important reason why the incoming freshman class selected their institution - 32 percent said that an important reason they picked their college was low tuition or because they were offered financial assistance. Nearly 40 percent said chances are good they will get a job to help out with college expenses. The percentage of students working full time rose to its highest level - 5.6 percent - since the question was introduced in 1982.

"These findings suggest that the students may be more interested in graduate degrees because they feel that advanced training will give them a competitive edge in their quest for jobs and financial security," Astin said. "It is also significant that the percentage of freshmen who expect to be satisfied with their college experience reached its lowest point in the history of the survey."

Nearly half (48 percent) said they expected to be satisfied with college, compared with 50.4 percent last year and 64.7 percent in 1970.

Among other findings of the survey:

- Competitive pressures and stress are at record levels. Record number of students are making multiple applications - 70.3 percent - and 22.2 percent of the freshmen applied to four or more colleges, a record. "A record of other findings suggest that students are feeling increasingly stressed," Astin said. A high number of respondents (23.2 percent, compared with 16 percent in 1985) said they "feel overwhelmed by all I have to do" and 9.4 percent said they frequently "felt depressed."

Ratings on emotional and physical health hit all-time lows, with the percentage of students missing classes because of sickness reached an all-time high. The study cites problems at home as possible reasons for these trends; 3.7 percent of the students said that their fathers were unemployed, and 25.1 percent said their parents are either separated or divorced.

- In terms of social issues and political attitudes, about half the students defined themselves as being to the left or right of the political center. Students claiming to be "middle of the road" dipped to 49.9 percent for the first time since 1972, down from 53 percent last year and 60 percent in 1980.

Those who considered themselves conservative increased 2.6 percentage points to 22.9 percent, the highest share reported since the question was first asked in 1970. The percentage who consider themselves left of center was 27.2 percent.

- Support to legalize marijuana increased to 28.2 percent, and student support for legislation to outlaw homosexuality declined for the sixth year in a row to a low of 36.2 percent. Eighty-one percent of the students support greater efforts to control handguns, and a greater number of students - 84.4 percent - support greater governmental efforts to reduce pollution.

Love Responsibly, Students Urged

By College Press Service

Ah, Valentine's Day! It's a time when thoughts turn to flowers, chocolates, champagne and an evening for two. But lovers should take heed:

"Cupid's arrow can have disastrous consequences for your health," advises Peggy Clarke, president of the American Social Health Association. "Love means behaving responsibly."

True love, Clarke says, also means carefully considering whether you are ready to enter a sexual relationship, having the courage to talk about each other's sexual history and taking precautions to prevent sexually transmitted diseases.

"While it is easy for most of us to believe that we aren't at risk for sexually transmitted diseases, the fact is that one in five adults in the U.S. already has an STD and the epidemic is spreading at a rate of 12 million new cases each year," Clarke said. "STD infections aren't limited to promiscuous people, drug users, homosexuals or low income groups. They attack all ages, but two-thirds of new infections occur in people under 25."

Entries Sought in Cartoon Contest

SOMERVILLE, Mass. - Think you're pretty funny on paper? There's a contest in progress for cartoonists who believe they've got the "write stuff."

World's Best Editorial Humor, a twice-monthly newspaper based in the Boston, is sponsoring a cartoon contest, with proceeds earmarked for the Greater Boston Food Bank. The cartoons will be reviewed by a panel of syndicated cartoonists, and winners' work will be submitted to syndicates as well as published in Editorial Humor.

If you would like to enter the contest, submit materials no later than March 4. There are six categories of competition: editorial cartoons, panels, comic strips, caricatures, young cartoonists (12-18) and creative ad design. The entry cost is $10 per category entered, and checks should be made payable to the Greater Boston Food Bank, a clearinghouse for agencies that feed 135,000 people a month.

Send materials on 8 1/2 by-11 paper with your name, address and telephone number on each page, one cartoon per page, three collated copies of 10-15 cartoons per category. Indicate which category or categories you are entering. Don't send originals; materials won't be returned. The contest is open to anyone except syndicated cartoonists or cartoonists who work for major publications. Entries should be sent to Editorial Humor, Department CC, P.O. Box 44-1289, Somerville, Mass. 02144.

ATTENTION GRADUATING CIVIL ENGINEERS

The Maryland State Highway Administration (SHA) is looking for talented graduating civil engineers to join our engineering team. SHA is a progressive organization responsible for the design, construction and maintenance of highways, bridges and traffic systems throughout the State of Maryland. Joining SHA means joining a team with one primary goal: providing the people of the State of Maryland with the best highway system in the country. We offer career opportunities in the areas of planning, structures, highway design, traffic management and safety, environmental design and hydraulics. We also offer a benefits package second to none: a state-of-the-art training and rotational program, generous leave benefits, various health insurance options, deferred compensation and retirement. All this in an environment that fosters personal growth and teamwork. If you are an engineer with ambition and initiative, SHA is the place for you. For information and an application, call SHA's Quality Advancement Office at (410) 333-6093. Application deadline is March 21, 1994. Staff Spotlight

Another person here at the university that goes the extra mile for the students

This week in Staff Spotlight, an interview with Jerome "Jerry" Donovan, one of our bus drivers here at UMass Lowell.

Jerry has been driving busses for five years, four of them here. He lives in Lawrence and some of his interests include hockey, baseball, collecting cards, comics, records, cds, Star Trek models, playing the bohron, an Irish rim drum, as well as playing the bones, Irish music, and photography. After graduating from Central Catholic, he joined the Navy where he worked on an aircraft carrier. Later on, he worked as a photographer, a receiver for Western electric and Osco Drug, and then became a bus driver.

He has two other brothers that also work as bus drivers. They are Paul, who works here at UML also, and Bill who drives in Lawrence.

Some of you might remember that Gerry had a heart attack towards the end of last semester and spent his vacation in the hospital. Well, he's back with us now and still doing the things he likes to do. You will always see him at the Chiefs hockey games, and he very often drives for the special events like the recent Valentine's Day Semi-Formal.

If you see him around, say "Hi", he is always ready with a story and a joke.

If you know of someone that deserves to be featured in our Staff Spotlight, feel free to drop a note off at the Office of Residence Life in Cumnock Hall. We know that there are many people out there that work hard for the students and we want to show them our appreciation.

Caring for Number One

Self-Love isn't Selfish

Should you "look out for number one"? Are you part of the "me" generation? Our society sends out mixed messages about self-love. Looked at one way, "number one" and "me" are trying to find the best in themselves. Looked at another way, caring for "number one" and "me" is labeled "selfish." Taking care of yourself seems to fly in the face of childhood lessons of modesty and humility. But taking care of yourself and holding yourself in high esteem can allow you to give much more freely of yourself to others.

Caring for You

Self-love is about you. You take care of yourself and your body. You get enough rest and quiet time to be able to keep things in perspective. You are able to be assertive and to set limits because you care about yourself and you don't want to disappoint others. You are secure in yourself.

Caring for Others

Self-love includes others. When you care about yourself, you are able to reach out and share with others. This, in turn, builds self-esteem and gives you a sense of purpose in life.

Making Lives Better

Self-love enhances the people around you. When you value and respect yourself, you are also able to value and respect others. People who love themselves are tolerant of others and don't feel the need to dominate or put others down. People who have a difficult time loving themselves, however, usually find pleasure only in being at one end of the dominance scale or the other.

The Self-love Attraction

Self-love brings people to you. Everyone likes to be around people who care about themselves because people with high self-esteem are able to care about others. Fare from being selfish, people who have self-love are able to make their own lives, and the lives of others, healthy and satisfying.

Residence Halls Receive More Protection!

Leitch Hall Council members decided that their building needed a little more protection, and in the process ended up helping everyone on campus. Leitch asked for condoms to be distributed via the vending machine. Woburn vending was contacted and after a little discussion, the condoms were placed inside.

Interestingly enough, the move came during the national Condom Awareness Week which was observed on campus last week. The week was aimed at giving information about the proper use of condoms as well as how they protect from various sexually transmitted diseases.

The condoms cost $1.00 a box which is a small price to pay for those unexpected emergencies. I just hope that the vending machine will take your dollar bill at the time.

The Valentine's Day Semi-Formal sponsored by RHA and all Hall Councils was a smashing success! On Thursday, February 10th, the semi was held at the Windsor Mills. The festivities officially began at seven p.m., but things began to pick up just after dinner when the dancing began. Jayne and Pia, above, really enjoyed the evening.

Ten Helpful Tips for Dealing With Anxiety

1. Now is where you are. Forget about past problems and situations.
2. Chase out the phantoms in your mind. Learn to differentiate between real fears and irrational ones.
3. Behave confidently. Confront your fears and deal with them straightforwardly. Take an active role in reducing sources of stress.
4. Think positively. You are what you think! Have faith in yourself.
5. Avoid uncomfortable situations. Put yourself first! Just remember, no one else will protect your interests as well as you.
6. Develop new habits in dealing with stress. It's a matter of discipline and practice.
7. Learn how to say no! It takes courage to stand up for your convictions. Be your own best friend.
8. Take care of yourself physically. Proper diet and good exercise will help.
9. Learn how to make decisions and stick with them.
10. If your anxiety is great and is present often, your physician may prescribe medication first. Follow his or her instructions for the temporary relief this can provide.

Bourgeois residents decorate their wing for the Valentines Day holiday and also just to make it a nicer place to live.

Head south for a warmer atmosphere

Welcome to south campus. You haven't been to south campus? Why not? Students in Sheehy and Concordia are sure pleased to live on that small green oasis. With it's more laid-back atmosphere, trees, grass, and athletic fields, South has a lot to offer. For the lucky "South campus majors" (like me) we've only to jump out of bed ten minutes before class, trot across Rolf street, and Allen house, and plop ourselves into a nice comfortable desk in Coburn, Mahoney, Weed, Dugan, or Durgin Hall.

Breakfast you say — for those Early birds who can spare the time, the south cafeteria opens at 7:00. ARA services adds a special touch to your morning. A big thanks for their hard work!

For those with late morning classes, you might want to take advantage of the new and vastly improved South Center's for Learning located in O'Leary library. — That is if the library's open when you want to use it!. From their modern computer lab to their tutoring services, this is one top rate organization. Say howdy to all the dedicated people who make our lives a lot easier!

Or perhaps you prefer a recreational start to the day. Drop into McGauvran the South Student Union building. Check out your mail on the third floor or plop in front of the big screen tube for an eye-full of M-TV. Pool you say? Just trade in your I.D. for a rack and Q. Oh Yea If your pencil needs lead check out the new Gift shop on the first floor. They've got your lead and lots of neat stuff, including STAMPS — those elusive little devils.

After Class you might be ready for some relaxation by the river. Of course, February's a bit nippy to watch the sunset over Nashua. Perhaps an evening show. Did you ever consider taking in a piano recital or one of the great shows offered by the music guru's in Durgin hall. Imagine a great night out within safe walking distance — free of cost in most cases. How about a game of hoops in Mahoney Gym? Just give Rec.-Sports a call and reserve the court.

Finally there's Allen House — South campus's crown jewel. Though tarnished, and weathered, this structure is a lasting tribute to the rich history of Lowell-State Teachers college, University of Lowell and University of Massachusetts - Lowell.

A novel could be dedicated to her history. Today She's the home of one known resident. Un-named and almost un-noticed, the mother of three, with four legs and a tail, alias Kitty. This impressive structure is in terrible shape but everyone's waiting for her revival (Maybe one day as a coffee house, hint hint) Today, the U-Mass Police use Allen House as a part-time office. Students still sit under the shade in back, on the porch, or on the steps to catch the breath taking view over the South Fields and Merrimack River. What a place to watch the sun set — a must try on a hot summer's day.(coming soon I hope)

Well that's the grand tour. Come on down and enjoy yourself. With it's touch of a real campus quad, and pseudo-rural setting, South is sure to please. Ah,— but leave your car behind. Soon, they tell us, there may be plenty of parking at the new athletic facility on North but until the cows come home there's no place to park your new multi-thousand dollar auto on South — except maybe downtown where it'll be towed! So hop on the bus and leave the driving to U-Mass!

At press-time, the names of those people responsible for organizing this new level of protection (condoms in the vending machines) were not available. We should like them to contact us so that we can spotlight them in next week's edition.

To let us know who you are, simply drop us a line at extension 2100 and leave your name and number. Kudos to you! We appreciate all of your hard work and look forward to hearing from you.

THE MASCOT

I've got it! I've solved the problem. I am the best--- next to Rush Limbaugh of course. Everyone can just start to thank me now even before you hear my solution to our problem. O.K. ready 1..2..3.., "Thank you Shawn!" You are all very, very welcome! Now, do you want to know what I've solved? The nickname/mascot problem we seem to have here at school now that all of the left-wing do-gooders have taken away our beloved CHIEFS. I've solved this problem with all of the infinite wisdom I've attained from listening to the two greatest minds in the time that we've been alive; Ronald Reagan and Rush Limbaugh. I'm going to explain myself very well and try not to loose any of you simple-minded left-wing-waco's, so try to stay with me.

FIRST: UML. University of Massachusetts Lowell right? Wrong. It stands for the University of Massachusetts Liberals. Come on and put it all together with me; Liberal teachers, Political Correctness, the whole nine yards. And just think about it we still get to keep the initials UML.

SECOND: Chiefs right? Wrong (well at least not anymore). I think that since we're all too afraid to stand up to the liberals anyway, that we should continue to praise them and name our school after them again; Pansies. How about it? It sure wouldn't be a violent mascot like the one we presently have; you know the one, that god awful, violent, war-loving Chief. It's not a sexist mascot, men and women can both be pansies. And it surely is not demeaning to any race, no matter what color you are, you can still be a pansy.

THIRD: The actual mascot itself. We have to have a symbol of liberalism in its purist form. Someone who will do us and the school proud as the mascot, right? Well I have once again pulled off the inevitable and thought of this one too - Jeff Nazzaro. Everything a liberal wants to be personified; well kind of!!

The UMass Liberal Pansies. Has a nice ring to it huh? And just think it'll put fear into the eyes of our opponents and if it doesn't maybe it'll make them laugh long enough so that we can get a few goals, runs, touchdowns, baskets, or whatevers up on them. I mean really who wants to play against a pansy? Then again who really wants to be a pansy? I DON'T and I don't think you do either so stand for yourselves people and show these leaders of ours that they work for us and not the other way around, before we really are the Pansies and even worse, Jeff Nazzaro is what we look forward to seeing at every sporting event. Actually that wouldn't be all that bad if we could have a ghost of a past Chief standing opposite him shooting flaming arrows at him!!!

A TRAIN STOP...

Don't you just hate those train tracks that block your direct route to south campus after you park in the Marginal lot? Don't you just hate trying to park after driving in from another city? Don't you wish you could catch a train to school instead of wasting all your hard earned money on gas? It sounds to me like nothing a little wood and a few phone calls couldn't clear up. Heck, if the trains going to come chugging on by, why not see if we can get it to stop here.

The benefits of a train stopping at the University are numerous. First of all the people that use it won't have to worry about parking and would also not be taking up a parking space. I'm not an environmentalist, nor have I ever claimed to be, but it also seems to me that the people who wouldn't have to drive would also not be puffing their cars fumes into the atmosphere. Don't you want to be stuck in rush hour on your way home? We'll I've never seen bumper to bumper traffic on a railroad track. Going to a Sox game after classes? Why no make it to batting practice, take the train. Is your car's front axle in your trunk because you hit a canyon-sized New England pothole? Take the train!! The list goes on and on. Well hey, we've got easier parking, politically correct environmental care, and an easy way to get around for residents and commuters alike, sounds good to me.

CLUB ROOMS

The Student Government Association, Student Union Board of Directors will be assigning club rooms in the Student Union Buildings for next year. If you wish to keep your club room or apply for one for 1994/95, you must fill out a room request form. Forms will be available on Tuesday, March 1st at the North and South S.I.C.'s and the S.G.A. Office, Fox 411. The deadline for filing this form is Tuesday, March 29th, 1994. If you do not submit an application during the specified time period, your application will be considered on an availability basis. All room request forms must be turned in to the S.G.A. Office, Fox 411.

I HAVE A CONCERN AND YOU SHOULD TOO!!!

Many will not forget the University students who protested in China. Some will not forget the protests of the sixties and seventies at colleges and Universities around the country. Will we be forgotten? I'm afraid that it looks that way.

Although we have a solid base of students at this university who continually get involved, a vast majority are never heard from. We are having a difficult time defending the rights of students when we don't have their input and support.

What is happening with the parking situations? What has happened to the libraries and what is being done about it? What arena? How much of a tuition increase is there going to be? How many Professors will be laid off? How many students will lose scholarships, jobs, or both? What will happen to the class size?

Do any of these questions concern you? I hope so. These are just a handful of the questions which I am trying to answer on behalf of the student body.

University and college students have shaped the world we live in many times throughout history. Is it time to reshape it again? Your comments and suggestions are important to us. Call the SGA Hotline at x 5006 or contact me at box 6200.

"In the Name of the Father"—Caught in the crossfire

Ken Provencher
Arts & Entertainment

The Irish Republican Army and the gangster movie both hit their peaks in the 1930's, and have shared a close and troubled relationship ever since. In recent movies like "The Long Good Friday" (1980), "The Crying Game" (1992), and now Jim Sheridan's "In the Name of the Father," the IRA has a direct bearing on the plot, but never has a chance to express itself—it's the U.K.'s version of

The Mob. Movies about American gangsters always had an explanation for the criminality of their characters: Prohibition, peer pressure, the American Dream. But the IRA remains inscrutable, beyond the fringe; it's just THERE, as irrational and unkillable as English hatred of the Irish. (Sometimes the members themselves aren't sure why they joined.) If our knowledge of the IRA came strictly from the movies, we'd think of it as a sadistic tribe of cold-blooded, free-lance bombers who say things like "Shoot him, for Fook's sake!" and "You're not gettin' cynical, are ya?" I don't know why this is; then again, I don't know why any English or Irish moviemaker would want to give these terrorists a chance to defend themselves.

Jim Sheridan isn't out to probe the terrorist mind. He's more concerned with the British judicial system, which uses equally cruel techniques on innocent Irishmen to earn the public trust. Sheridan sees the IRA as more than a zealous killer elite who want to annex Northern Ireland; he sees it as a social phenomenon that brings out the worst in both nationalities. To Sheridan, the English are incurably anti-Irish, and the Irish, being the underdog, have a hidden admiration for the terrorists they denounce. "In the Name of the Father" should make history overseas, and while few of us will take the movie personally, our reactions show how movies—or any art, for that matter—can make us feel for the unfamiliar.

The irony of the IRA situation is that it allows the British to play victim and to enact racist policies that would be outrageous and offensive in the absence of a terrorist threat. By blowing up English property to assert its independence, the IRA merely succeeds in bringing hardship to neutral Irishmen and in alienating its mother country. This causes a lot of tension in the Irish ghettos, where IRA recruits mix with the nonpolitical working class. Armed guards and tanks patrol the neighborhood, and the slightest infraction can cause a shoot-out or race riot. The movie opens with young Gerry Conlon (Daniel Day-Lewis) sifting around a rooftop for scrap metal; a British sentry thinks him a sniper, and opens fire. Conlon, a petty thief who's too undisciplined for the IRA (they hold him in contempt), makes matters worse by running away. The tanks spin around, the guards slap on their helmets and shields, and the chase is on. In this grotesquely hilarious sequence, Conlon tears through houses and yards while total strangers bang garbage can lids to alert the police to his presence. Soon the whole area is involved: Irish families line up to protest the tanks, the IRA makes a desperate getaway, and the police launch tear gas to clear the streets. It's a great opening, and it certainly gets your attention.

When the riot is over and the movie settles down (briefly), the intensity of it didn't seem possible: for a minute all hell broke loose, and now we're back where we started. As a way of introducing Conlon, the riot is quite a risk; the sheer spectacle of it reduces him to a body in motion. The pay-offs come right after, though, when the IRA threatens to do a kneecap job on Conlon, and his father (Pete Postlethwaite) has to come and rescue him. We see that he's never been ambitious or responsible, and probably doesn't even feel worthy of a rescue. Caught in the crossfire of an international skirmish, he's always been a body in motion. The violence he hurls himself through is the biggest kick of his life. He's unexcitable and aimless, the quintessential loser. For his father to take an interest in his health and future is almost unbelievably noble.

These first few scenes are superb; there isn't a thing wrong with them. Sheridan makes a direct link between the shenanigans of Parliament, the senseless struggle of the IRA, and Gerry Conlon's slacker attitude. It also makes sense to have Conlon's father be the only one to look after him. Postlethwaite restores dignity to the dear-old-Dad role that used to throw a wet blanket over reckless-youth movies. Yes, the old man owns a store, and yes, he knows right away when his son screws up. But he's hardly conventional: unlike his longwinded, moralist predecessors, who are usually to blame for their rotten kids, Postlethwaite has a rugged, purposeful demeanor that suggests a loathing for sentimentality. (He looks like a gaunt Albert Finney.) You need Ward Cleaver to help you into the dentist's chair. You need Giuseppe Conlon to help you take down a mugger.

As the death toll rises and the public demands satisfaction, Parliament passes the Prevention of Terrorism Act in 1974, which permits the police to detain a bombing suspect for up to seven days without a formal charge. This means that, with the flimsiest of evidence, the police can arrest anyone they wish and do whatever it takes to get a confession, as long as they meet their deadline. No one seems to have a problem with this: not the English, who can live with the injustice as long as their homes are safe; not the Irish government, which has long since disowned the IRA and considers it a blight to its nation; and definitely not the IRA, who can build a branch army of patsies to keep the police off their backs.

Acting on a tip, the police arrest Conlon and three of his hippie friends for a Guildford pub bombing that killed five people. Conlon wasn't in Guildford at the time, and probably wouldn't know how to set a timer, much less build one. Thanks to the Terrorist Act, though, the police get their confession; Conlon is starved, beaten, and humiliated into signing away his life. (The "confession" is a blank sheet of paper with a line on the bottom; the police fill in the rest.) Under English law a confessor is good as guilty, and the Guildford Four get hard sentences. The police know a natural resource when they see one, so they arrest Conlon's father, aunt, friends, and cousins for running a bomb factory in London. This is bitter moviemaking (all the more potent because it's based in fact), and it goes by very fast. Sheridan skims over these scenes as if he knew we've been primed by ten million hours of courtroom drama and could spot the verdict a reel away. I've never been so pleased to find so little suspense in a movie trial.

It's hard to tell what Sheridan has in mind until Conlon goes to prison. When he's joined by his father, and later by an IRA ringleader, the conflicts of the opening scenes are renewed in a more intimate setting. Conlon is stuck between the sharp-eyed, psychotic IRA man (Don Baker, who has what romance novelists would call "chiseled" features) and his conscientious, annoyingly familiar father. The details aren't exactly true—the IRA member is a composite character—but they're brilliant enough to make you think the soul of Ireland is at stake in Conlon's wavering loyalties and frustrated attempts to express himself.

This is the kind of movie that depends entirely on the intuition of a single actor. It's probably not much of a compliment to say that no one else could play Conlon the way Daniel Day-Lewis plays him, so I'll put it this way: If anyone else comes up with the idea of playing Conlon, kill him. "In the Name of the Father" has a classical structure, but because of Day-Lewis it looks like the first movie of its kind. Conlon is more than an innocent man wrongly accused; he's a nervous drifter so unsure of himself that he's almost relieved to be in prison. It's sad that he feels close to the other inmates, even if they do share their drugs and tell jokes and start snowball fights. (He's so weak-minded the police didn't need the full seven days to grill him.) Once in a while he checks in on his father, who's busy writing letters to Parliament and coming down with a fever. Fifteen years later, when the Guildford Four verdicts are overturned and Conlon is left to deal with a tragic loss, Day-Lewis ages him more convincingly than any makeup artist could. A movie like this is the reason movies like this should be made. Conlon's maturing beyond the English/Irish conflict is Sheridan's telling both nations to grow up.

The Connector Wants YOU!

The Connector has served as a source of information and entertainment for the student body here at UMass Lowell for decades. It has provided News articles pertaining to students and faculty, Sports articles with coverage of our UML teams, and Arts & Entertainment articles which have offered reviews and previews of movies, music and plays. The Connector has also provided announcements from the administration or clubs, and advertisements that serve as a medium for local businesses trying to tap into the student market.

It can provide much more...especially for students who contribute to the paper.

- For English or journalism majors, joining our staff is a quick and easy way to pad a resume, build a portfolio, or hone your proof-reading skills.
- Criminal Justice majors could work with UML and Lowell Police to cover stories or write a police log.
- Business majors can gain valuable experience by soliciting and designing advertisements for local or national businesses.

- Art majors can contribute by submitting "Comix" or working with the layout of the pages.

And those are just some obvious, practical benefits...there are also many intangibles that make working for the Connector well worth your while. You can immediately become involved in part of campus life; something that might often seem difficult for a commuter to do.

Our meetings are held Monday night at 6:00 p.m. in Fox Hall Room 426...well, usually. Sometimes (like this week) there is a Monday holiday so we delay our meeting until Tuesday. They only last about a half hour and there is free pizza and soda following the meeting. If you are not satisfied with the meeting, you can keep the pizza and soda as our gift to you.

I hope to see you there.

If, for some earthshattering reason, you can not attend a meeting or have any questions about The Connector, I can be reached weekdays after 3:00 at 934-5009.

Publication Policy

Deadline is 5:00 p.m. Monday in Fox 426. On Monday holidays deadline is 5:00 p.m. Tuesday. The Connector considers for publication reviews, articles and commentaries on any topic of interest to members of the U Mass Lowell community.

Submission Guidelines: The easiest way to submit long articles or letters is to enter them directly into our computer. Otherwise they must be typed double-spaced with equal margins. Include your name and box number. A phone number is advised in case of questions.

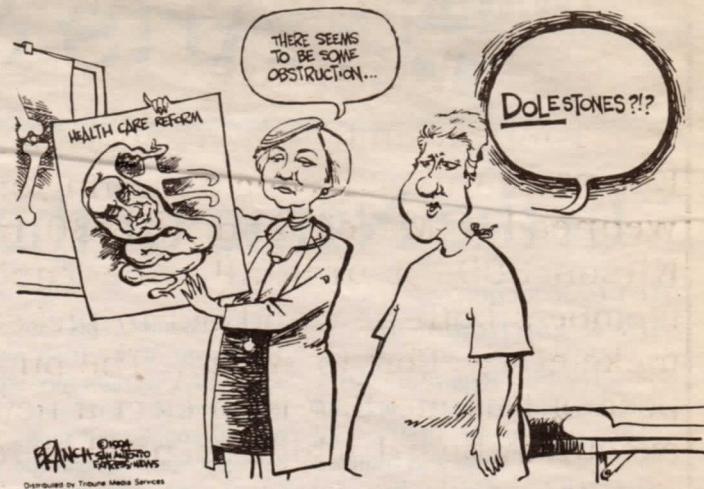

Notices: These should be short and informative: dates, places, meeting times, deadlines, club announcements, etc.

Organizational Ads: The Connector typesets display ads for university organizations sponsoring general events. Handwritten flyers will be typeset and not directly reproduced. Repeat printings may be cut out and mounted on paper. The Connector reserves the right to limit space to non-paid ads.

Comics: Comics are published at the discretion of the comics editor. They must be drawn 4" x 10" in black ink. Do not use pencil.

Personals/Classifieds: These must be typed on 3" x 5" index cards double-spaced. Student classifieds will run for two weeks free of charge. Call to renew if desired. The Connector reserves the right to edit for length.

Office Hours: Mon.-Thurs.. 8:30-4:00, Fri. 8:30-2:00. Call anytime at 934-5009.

Recycling Update

In the next few weeks, MASSPIRG's recycling group will begin to go into local elementary schools to educate schoolchildren on recycling and products that are bad for the environment. We will also be starting to work on increasing on-campus recycling. Anyone interested in helping out with this or hearing

Parking Woes

I am writing in response to a portion of Jeff Nazzaro's informed as well as informative column last week. He states that he will mention the blatant hazard our slick sidewalks and unplowed parking lots present for as long as it remains thus. I would like to point out an added observation.

When I, along with many other unfortunate commuters, pull up to the south campus parking lot every morning, I notice that there are an abundance of cars parked in particularly odd parking spots. Upon reflection, I realize that the offending cars are the same cars that were found oddly parked the previous morning. What could be the reason for this? My assessment shows that these cars have not moved since the last snowstorm, when the marked spaces were not highly visible. My problem lies not with the fact that this person could not park between the lines due to the snow. My question is why hasn't this car been moved and why is it necessary to park in the front rows of the parking lot, and to not move their cars for the whole week or longer? When I come here early in the morning to get some extra work done, as well as attend some early classes, I find at least the first two rows taken up by cars. While admittedly this still leaves me room to park at that ungodly hour, I realize that these are not the cars of studious people who arrive at 6:30 in the morning, but of residents whose cars have remained overnight (or longer).

What's with this? When I was at my previous school, we were not provided parking at all. If one wanted to attend school, one would have to be a resident, or find one's own parking space on the crowded streets of Boston. I have no idea why the student parking situation must be overcrowded with resident cars as well. Shouldn't dorm students be barred from obtaining parking stickers? It seems to me that the same residence hall students who complained last year about the prospect of maybe having to go out of their way to get to a downtown bookstore feel a need to have an automobile on campus, in case they do decide to wander downtown or further. Maybe it's me, but what the hell do residence hall students need a car on campus for? If they must have a car on campus, shouldn't they have to park in the Marginal Street lot? At least then they would be out of the way of the students who need to park their cars here, and have more to lose if they get towed. Maybe a solution such as this could solve the parking problem altogether.

The Psychology behind the Citibank Classic Visa card: The emotional security of the Photocard, now with No Annual Fee.

The Citibank Classic Visa® instills in students feelings of safety, security, and general wellness not unlike those experienced in the womb. Therefore, it is the mother of all credit cards. ¶ Some experts attribute these feelings to the Citibank Photocard, the Subject suffering from Credit Card Theft Nervosa.

first credit card with your photo on it. A voice inside says, "This is me, really me." (As opposed to, "Who the heck is that?"—a common response to the photo on one's Student ID.) It's an immediate form of ID, a boost to your self-image. ¶ Of course if your card is ever lost or stolen and a stranger is prevented from using it, you'll feel exceptionally good (showing no signs of Credit Card Theft Nervosa). ¶ Other experts point to other services, such as The Lost Wallet™ Service that can replace your card usually within 24 hours. Or the 24-Hour Customer Service line, your hotline if you will, for any card-related anxiety whatsoever. ¶ Further analysis reveals three services that protect the services you make on the Citibank Classic Visa card, at no additional cost. 1. Buyers Security™ can cover them against accidental damage, fire or theft, for 90 days from the date of purchase¹ (preventing, of course, Insecurity).

2. Citibank Lifetime Warranty™ allows one to extend the warranty for the expected service life of eligible products up to 12 years.² 3. And Citibank Price Protection assures you of the best price. You need only see the same item advertised in print for less, within 60 days, and Citibank will refund the difference up to $150¹ (hence no Post Purchase Depression). ¶ Special student savings are particularly therapeutic. For example, you can receive a $20 Airfare Discount³ on any domestic flight. (Case studies indicate that a Fear of Flying is overcome when Spring Break in sunny Florida is a possibility.) Not to mention savings on mail order purchases, sports equipment, magazines and music; a low variable interest rate⁴ of 15.4% and No Annual Fee. ¶ Suffice it to say, you'll have a credit card you can depend on while building a credit card history. So, call 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), extension 19, to apply over the phone (students don't need a job or cosigner) or to have your photo added to your Citibank Classic Visa card. ¶ If we say that a sense of Identity is the first component of the Citibank Classic Visa card, a sense of Security the second, and a sense of Autonomous Will from your newfound financial independence the third, don't be crazy...Call.

The Monarch® Notes Version:

The Citibank Classic card gives students no annual fee, peace of mind, protection against Freud—or rather fraud—and a low rate. Apply today. Call 1-800-CITIBANK (1-800-248-4226), ext. 19.

UMASS LOWELL RECYCLES

The Environmental Health & Safety (EHS) dept. and the Society of Env. Scientists (SES) is happy to announce that the UMass Lowell recycling room will be reopened here on North Campus, a staff of volunteers from SES and EHS will be on hand Monday from 9-3 to accept recyclable goods. We encourage students participation in this recycling effort so our university can be credited as a "recycling university." At present, only small amounts of paper + cans are recycled and the hope is to greatly increase this number.

The recycle room is located on the 2nd floor corner between Falmouth & Pasteur (near the College of Marketing Office.) Anyone interested in volunteering should stop by the recycle room, the SES club room, OH 202 or call ext. 6666 and speak with one of the volunteers.

Watch for our weekly updates here in The Connector.

Women pick up the pace... Men suffer another setback

by Jeremy A. Cohen
Sports Writer

Last Monday night the Lady Chiefs beat the Purple Knights of Bridgeport College. The Lady Chiefs are now 17-6 overall and 10-3 in the NECC.

The Chiefs took control right away in the game with an incredible 21-4 lead. They continued strong with a 27 point lead in the second period (63-36). They ended up winning the game by a final score of 82-68.

Freshman forward Laurie Mann lead the Chiefs with 19 points. In the first twenty minutes of the game she went 6 for 7 from the floor and four straight from three point range.

Orlando-Ciarcia also had a fantastic game with 19 points. She also 15 rebounds and blocked 5 shots.

The Lady Chiefs are only one game out of first place. Leading the NECC race is the Lady Ravens of Franklin-Pierce College. The Chiefs still have three league games left to better their record before they start the playoffs on the 28th.

Come and cheer our ladies on to victory with their Senior Darlene Orlando-Ciarcia of the U Mass Lowell Women's Hoop Team has been named NECC & ECAC player of the week for the week of February 7th 1994. In addition Orlando-Ciarcia was named to the GTE/College Sports Information Directors of America District One Academic All-American team that was released February 15. In three games Darlene grabbed 35 rebounds, blocked 12 shots, and scored 85 points; including a phenomenal 48 point effort. Orlando-Ciarcia dominates in the classroom with a 3.48 GPA in computer science here at the university.

Nora "Doobie" Baston takes it to the hoop in recent NECC action.

last season game on the 23rd at New Hampshire College. Game time starts at 5:30 p.m..

The Men gave Bridgeport a run for their money but Bridgeport won the game by a score of 98-86.

The men went after the Ravens hard and even managed to out-score them in field goals 36-31. Unfortunately, UML also lead in personal fouls 24-14 and Bridgeport capitalized by converting 31 of 38 free throws.

Sophomore Jeichael

Henderson lead Lowell with 19 points and 11 rebounds. Rickey Spencer added 17 points of his own and Spencer Staggs had 14 points including four three pointers. Mark Davis had 9 rebounds and 15 points and Lowell native Jim Borodawka was named rookie of the week by the NECC.

Junior Brent Oakleaf and Freshman Chad Kimbrough played with lots of vigor for Lowell contributing with timely rebounding and assists.

Lowell is now 8-15 overall and 5-9 in the league. Come watch the men go at it on the 23rd at New Hampshire College. This will be their final game of the season before they start the playoffs.

"Logo Limbo"

Ok, for those of you who conduct your daily lives in a vacuum that is void of any information pertaining to the university... we are going to change the school nickname, mascot, and logo.

The idea has been milling about the minds of the administrators for the past few semesters, and a couple of weeks ago it finally came to fruition as the university announced that it officially dropped the name "Chief" and the chief head logo. I only wish it were that easy to drop a class here at the university, but that's a different story.

In any event, we have made a drastic move that has given rise to opinions, objections, praise, and complaints. Now... before we get carried away, like we always do, I want to try to keep this issue in the proper perspective.

The action has been done. There is no going back. There is no reconsidering. We are no longer the Chiefs, plain and simple. In weeks to come you will hear people complain about the change. They will claim it is a university scam to sell more t-shirts and hats. You will hear that it is a trivial complaint by Indians who are trying to gain recognition. In a submission on page six of this issue someone even tried to claim that the change was politically motivated. How pathetic. The action has been done - why point the finger now?

Furthermore, what significance does the term "Chief" have to the university anyway? None. Does anyone really benefit by having a chief logo? Will anyone be harmed if we change it? Is it some sort of lucky emblem? Does it have magic powers? No, it's just a stupid figurehead. It has no significance or relevance to the university or the community whatsoever. We say it is a symbol of bravery and courage... but if the Indians don't even think so, why do we? I keep hearing people say "It's not really offensive and it really doesn't make a difference, so why get rid of it?" To that I say, quite obviously, "Why not?"

I'm not going to get into the issue of whether the name change was right or wrong, or whether it was necessary or not. These are arguments that carry no weight - because the change has been made. What I do think is that we need to hurry up and find a new logo, but more importantly, I think we need to find a good one.

What we have here is a golden opportunity. Look at all the schools that have great logos - like the Notre Dame "Fighting Irish." It has significance, it's popular (who doesn't have at least one ND hat, shirt, or sweatshirt?) and it's highly recognized. What basketball team wouldn't like to be called the "Hoosiers?" Or what football team wouldn't like to have a rough-tough name like the "Raiders."

We have an opportunity to choose a new logo to represent our school. Think about all of the possibilities. We could be the Millers - in memory of the mill workers who started the industrial revolution right here in Lowell Mass. We could be the Lightning - and have a flashy new style with lots of neat catch phrases (lightning on ice, etc.) The possibilities are unlimited.

Deja-vu for Chiefs in Maine Event

Hockey team ties Maine 4-4 in both weekend contests

Sports Information
Press Release

The Chiefs and Black Bears each earned two points in the series, but not by virtue of the customary series split. The two clubs, who had met 41 previous times, played the first two ties in their series history within a 24-hour period.

After Friday night's encounter was postponed to Sunday afternoon due to inclement weather, the two teams took the ice Saturday night in front of the largest Tully Forum crowd (2,860) since the 1984-85 season. Maine jumped out to a 1-0 lead before senior LW Shane Henry roofed a backhander for an unassisted goal and senior defenseman Kerry Angus tallied his tenth goal of the season. The Bears took advantage of a rare mistake by senior goalie Dwayne Roloson to tie the game at 2-2 with a shorthanded goal in the last minute of the first period.

Senior RW Mike Murray's powerplay goal gave the Chiefs a 3-2 lead at 1:44 of the second period, but Maine came right back 72 seconds later with a powerplay goal of its own to tie the game. The Bears held a wide edge in shots on goal (17-9), but the territorial play was fairly even.

Senior defenseman Travis Tucker gave the Chiefs a 4-3 lead with his first goal of the season at 17:08 of the final period. Maine's Tim Lovell tied the game 65 seconds later at 18:13 to force overtime. Neither team scored in the extra session as Roloson (45 saves) and Blair Allison closed the door.

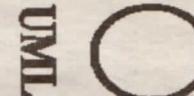

Sunday afternoon's game started the same way as Maine jumped to a 1-0 lead 25 seconds into the contest. Henry's 10th goal of the season, coming while the Chiefs were on the powerplay, tied the game.

The only goal of the second period was scored by Murray while the Chiefs enjoyed the man advantage at 4:23.

Freshman Neil Donovan gave the Chiefs a two-goal advantage at 1:26 of the third period. Maine got back within one at 11:53, but Murray restored the two-goal margin 53 seconds later with his second goal of the game. The lead held until the final three minutes when Patrice Tardif scored twice for the Bears.

Crew Team Member Needed...

You may have noticed the advertisement in this week's paper for crew team member. The women's team needs a coxswain. The coxswain steers the boat, pushes and commands the team to win. But, if you think that just because you don't row you are not part of the team - you are wrong! Along with going to the races with the team, the coxswain works out with the team and attends practice with the team. He or she can learn to row also.

Now that I have you all excited about joining the crew team, you are probably wondering "Well, what exactly does the crew team do?" As mentioned, a crew team is a rowing team. The team rows on the river and works out inside during practices but for races the team goes to other places. Worcester, New Hampshire, Boston and Philadelphia are just a few of the places the team is going this spring. So, if you would like to join call 454-4631 between 4:00 p.m. and 6:00 p.m. Remember you will be on a VARSITY TEAM! See you there!

Band Notes....

The UMass Lowell Marching Band Alumni banquet is coming up. For those of you who may not know, the Alumni welcomes all undergraduates who have marched one season at a reduced ticket cost. Currently a number of undergraduates (seniors take note!!) are intending to go. See Deb for details or call the MB extension. The banquet is scheduled for March 26 at 6pm.

The Percussion ensemble will be performing on April 28. There are still a couple o' gaps, so if you have interest, come check it out. They meet on Wed. nights in the Durgin CH at 6pm.

The Winds are well underway with some interesting instrument exchanges. If you want to get in some playing time, now's the time to do so: Monday nights at 7:30pm in Durgin 113.

Last note: 'tis time to think about the upcoming season, though it be in the distance. Those of you who can return to your high schools, please contact us ASAP. Information will be disseminated shortly.
